

THE AXIS

By early 1944, the signs of an inevitable Axis defeat were there for all to see. German forces were being pushed back on all fronts. In the East, Stalin's inexhaustible supply of men and materials were on the verge of collapsing the German defences whilst to the south the Western Allies were conducting a grinding advance up the spine of Italy. Meanwhile over the Channel, a quarter of a million US and Commonwealth troops were ready to land in France to complete the encirclement of the thousand-year Reich. Then, on 12 March 1944, everything changed as atomic destruction rained down on Dresden, opening a new terrible chapter in the history of conflict.

The old National Socialist leadership was swept away almost overnight and Germany underwent a profound transformation as the triumphant devotees of the Grünes Gewölbe (The Green Vault) took power. Society, industry and culture were ruthlessly remodelled and nowhere was that change as great as amongst the Axis armed forces.

The Waffen SS was dissolved and its manpower and mechanised assets were sequestered directly by the Grünes Gewölbe. Some were merged with the existing Wehrmacht and Volkssturm forces to become the Volksarmee of the Neu Republik. The armed forces of the surviving Axis minor powers were co-opted both individually and in entire units to swell the ranks – all would stand or fall together as a single, unified Axis.

The Axis military machine remains on the defensive, but its primary mission has moved from simply fighting in preparation for a last stand to one of preserving the existing borders of Greater Germany and its European vassals. Tasked with being the first line of defence against enemy assaults are the soldiers of the rifle infantry, the Schwertruppen advanced infantry and pre-Rift modified armoured vehicles. However, it is inevitable that holes may appear in the line which need to be plugged. In these situations a 'fire brigade' of powered armoured Schwertruppen heavy infantry and Panzers are deployed to shatter enemy breakthrough forces before they can exploit and advance into rear areas.

Axis scientists unravelling the secrets of electro-magnetism and gravity have provided these units with a new family of gravity-harnessing weapons ranging from rail guns to the 'Schwerefeld' series of gravitic weapons capable of crushing even the most protected infantry and armoured vehicles. These forces are more than capable of fighting toe-to-toe with the best their foes can throw against them, including their latest Rift units.

The most arcane and unsettling gift of the Rift, that of biological manipulation, was also the first encountered by the Allies in the battlefields of France and Russia as early as 1944. It was the massed hordes of the walking dead, the Totenkorps, and the feral Schreckwulfen, that caused mass panic in the enemy ranks and allowed the Axis to stabilise its collapsing borders. Later abominations produced by this corrupted science include the Nachtjäger and Nachtalben whose cruel intelligence and mutable, grotesque forms became a deadly threat both on the battlefield and behind the front.

Away from the war-torn borders life for the average Neu Republik citizen appears peaceful on the surface, the skies are no longer darkened by bomber armadas, the Soviet hordes are only a distant threat, life proceeds at the unhurried pace of an earlier, more civilised age.

But beneath the dream-like facade a nightmare reality lurks.

Axis soldiers; fathers, brothers, sons, now serve in both life and in death. Dresden is an infernal furnace that burns night and day, and now the great industrial zone of the Ruhr is lit by the same unholy lights. The voices of leaders from the old Reich scream out praise for the Grünes Gewölbe and the Neu Republik across the radio waves, yet no one truly believes that they are still whole, or sane, or even living. No voice can be raised in dissension, for fear of the dead that walk in the night.

THE ARMY LIST

This army list describes the troops, equipment, and special abilities available to the Axis in games of Konflikt '47. It may be used in conjunction with the Force Selection rules on pages 164-171 of the Konflikt '47 Rulebook. Each unit entry specifies its type for the purposes of fulfilling the slots in each type of Platoon.

Incorporating Bolt Action Units

If both players agree, they may use units taken from Bolt Action Armies of Germany: Third Edition in their list (see page 164 of the Konflikt '47 rulebook). It is recommended that any units taken be identified as 'Late War' units in Armies of Germany. Any Infantry units count as Basic Infantry for the purposes of the Konflikt '47 Platoon Selectors.

With the opening of the Rifts, the nature of warfare has changed. For this reason, any Bolt Action units taken do not benefit from the Axis Army Special Rules, with the exception of Buzz Saw, nor do they benefit from the Army Special Rules present in Armies of Germany.

ARMY SPECIAL RULES

OUR SALVATION

Axis forces are unified and driven by a singular promise, 'Unsere Rettung' – our salvation. They believe the power of the Rifts is commanded by the Green Vault, and through that power the Axis will rise again to dominate the world. The Axis' mastery of Rift energy lends weight to this belief as it is all too evident on the battlefield.

In the Turn End Phase, when rolling Exhausted Rift Dice, an Axis army may re-roll one result.

HAND OF THE GREEN VAULT

Through the careful placement of its devoted agents throughout the Volksarmee of the Neu Republik, the Green Vault spreads the word of salvation to the common soldier.

At the start of the game, before deployment, choose a Platoon or Company Commander in your force. That Officer immediately gains a point of Rift Mastery. This model may not be a unit from the Heroes section of the Army List.

SCHWEREFELD MASTERY

The Axis were the first to truly unlock the secrets of the Rift, and quickly realised the benefit of retrofitting their already formidable armour with terrifying new gravitic weapons. The best tank and walker commanders are particularly adept at managing their vehicle's power plants to get the most out of such weapons.

One Veteran Axis Vehicle in your force equipped with a Schwerefeld Projektor may deploy with one of its Rift Dice set to Surging.

HARDENED VETERANS

The war has worn on since 1939, and those who have survived post-Dresden have witnessed atrocities that are as living nightmares; yet they endure. Others trust in the newfound safety of their personal power armour to protect them from this new world of horrors.

Veteran Axis units, or any units wearing Powered Armour, never suffer a -1 Morale penalty when the leader of their squad/team is removed as a casualty.

BUZZ SAW

Allied and Soviet soldiers continue to fear the 'ripping cloth' sound which announces the arrival of a rapid fire Axis machine gun. The new MG 44 and its MG 34 and MG 42 forebears are all capable of formidable rates of fire and are an essential element of Axis small unit tactics.

Axis Light and Medium Machine Guns fire one extra Shot. For Vehicle-mounted Machine Guns, first half the number of Shots before adding the extra one.

HEROES

HAUPTMANN HEINRICH GROSS

Heinrich Gross was a rising star in the Panzergrenadiers who was singled out for 'special training and re-education' by the Grünes Gewölbe during their takeover of the Axis armed forces. Gross was a hardened fighter in every sense of the word, a veteran of the Ostfront, survivor of Stalingrad and a holder of the Knight's Cross, as tough as they come. Even so, Gross' former comrades were shocked by his appearance when he returned to lead them once more. All traces of warmth and humanity had been snuffed out, the coldly clinical mind left behind was tactically brilliant, brutally efficient and utterly ruthless. His scarred face and icy blue eyes held a murderous promise for anyone or anything that stood between him and final victory.

On the battlefield Gross is seemingly in his true element. He is preternaturally quick and strong with a penchant for hand to hand combat, seeming to relish the opportunity to come to grips with the enemy and prove his superiority. The sheer strength and power of his presence inspires those he leads. Gross' handpicked brigade of Grenadiers moves relentlessly from front to front to wherever the fighting is hardest. Few of Gross' old comrades have endured his punishing pace through the years, but those who have are instilled with an unshakable sense of loyalty to him, to the point that death in his service would be just as glorious as any victory.

OFFICERS

The Axis officer cadre are the inheritors of a proud Prussian tradition established in the Napoleonic Wars. After World War I an elite corps of officers held onto lowly ranks as subalterns, corporals, and privates within the highly restricted military dictated by the Allies after their victory. When the arms race for World War II began these veterans transitioned to become the Generals, Colonels, Majors, and Captains of the new-formed divisions, bringing decades of professionalism to the rapidly expanding military. Axis officers have been the glue that prevented their armed forces disintegrating under the thunderous impacts of eight years of non-stop fighting against all-comers. Their enemies have learned to treat Axis officers with wary respect.

MEDICS

Among the vast reorganisation of Axis forces undertaken by the Grünes Gewölbe the medical corps has been left largely intact. Seemingly these men of learning are considered sacrosanct by the new masters of Germany in some way, and their efforts to ameliorate sickness and suffering are allowed to proceed unhindered. However, their ranks have also been bolstered by other, less salubrious individuals from more questionable places of learning.

FORWARD OBSERVERS

The advent of all the new weapons, war machines, and troops after the Rifts has done little to reduce the importance of air and artillery support. However, the Axis is often outnumbered in terms of the sheer numbers of guns or aircraft it can field in comparison to its foes, instead relying on achieving local superiority for long enough to get the job done.

INFANTRY

VOLKSGRENADIER SQUAD

The atomic bombing of Dresden was followed by a rapid and apparently pre-planned reorganisation of the German fighting forces. Wehrmacht and SS infantry formations were dissolved. Officers and men still loyal to the old National Socialist ideals disappeared without trace. The rank and file Landers and Grenadiers were reformed into Volksgrenadier formations as part of the new Volksarmee. Armies of the European Axis were swept up in the change, unquestioningly blending all their available manpower into the greater, more cohesive whole. Better equipped, supplied and led by officers who share the vision of the Neu Republik, the Volksgrenadiers have become the backbone of the new combined Axis military.

SHOCKTROOPER SQUAD

After the opening of the Dresden Rift, the Waffen SS was dissolved, with the majority of its assets swept under the control of the Volksarmee. Its most valuable assets, however, were sequestered directly by the Grünes Gewölbe. Those who did not see eye-to-eye with the new regime were quietly 'volunteered' for Rift-experimentation, never to be seen again, at least not in human form. The remainder were formed into the new Shocktrooper units, to maximise their fanatical devotion on the front lines. Well-equipped, and sporting advanced body armour, they can often be found at the spearhead of an assault, particularly in operations in which the Green Vault has a particular interest.

LEGIO AQUILA SQUAD

The most fanatical and loyal soldiers remaining devoted to Mussolini - the Esercito Nazionale Repubblicano - are trained along the same lines as the Volksgrenadiers. They receive the best equipment and training and are dedicated to the defence of the Gustav line. They are, however, expected to spearhead any counter-attacks along the Gustav Line. Styled after the ancient Romans, the Legio Aquila combines patriotic fervour, dogged resilience, and aggressive tactics to achieve its goals. Though led by experienced NCOs and officers, the effectiveness of the Legion is hampered by its small size, limited mobility, and lack of armoured support.

SCHWERTRUPPEN SQUAD

After many years of dogged defence in the East and the recent retreat from France, the new masters of the Axis intended to regain the initiative by creating cadres of heavily armoured troopers trained in the art of attack. Therefore, the best and the brightest of the Volksgrenadiers and Italy's Legio Aquila were selected to form the new Schwer Squads. Equipped with heavy powered armour and advanced firearms these flexible units bulwark the front, forming the spearhead of Axis counter-attacks and exploiting the breakthroughs made by the Panzer regiments and Stahltruppen super-heavy infantry.

ITALIAN CENTURION SQUAD

The Axis have also produced an Italian variant of their Rift-tech derived heavy armour, styled after the ancient Romans as per the troops of the Legio Aquila, imbuing the troops of the Esercito Nazionale Repubblicano with a sense of moral righteousness and ancestral claim against their cousins in the Esercito Cobelligerate Italiano. Somewhat ornate rather than practical, they carry a ballistic shield styled after an ancient scutum. As a result they are not as well equipped as the Schwertruppen squads, but their presence at the Gustav line is appreciated as a heavy assault force for countering or blunting attacks from the south.

STAHLTRUPPEN SQUAD

Rift-driven technologies created new ballistic resistant materials and power assisted servos made the deployment of a new class of fighting soldier possible, the augmented powered armour trooper. Virtually invulnerable to standard firearms and armed with rapid fire weapons the Stahltruppen proved almost unstoppable. Despite the arrival of United States and British Commonwealth Heavy Infantry to partially counter the threat, these super-heavy armoured warriors are still regarded as the most effective of the Volksarmee's human soldiery.

FALLSCHIRMJÄGER FALKE (FALCON) SQUAD

Falcon Troops are elite infantry enhanced with advanced Rift-energy powered Kontragravitation harnesses. These devices grant limited flight capabilities allowing the Falke to bypass difficult terrain. Recruited from former Fallschirmjäger formations, these troops are equipped with advanced automatic weapons. Through the combination of agility, versatility, and striking power the Falke excel in flanking attacks to outmanoeuvre less mobile Allied and Soviet units.

PARACADUTISTI FALCO (FALCON) SQUAD

The Axis also provides their Kontragravitation harnesses to Paracadutisti still loyal to the Axis. TOTENKORPS SQUAD

The Totenkorps were the first examples of Rift-derived forces encountered by the Allies and Soviets. Immune to pain and fear, they swamp their foes through sheer relentlessness and inhuman resilience. As such the Totenkorps are mostly employed as terror troops, soaking up enemy fire before closing and engaging in brutal close quarters combat. Even defeated Totenkorps can rise again, potentially many times, before being finally laid to rest. Their decayed forms invariably spread fear on the battlefield, making them a profound threat to even the most hardened enemy combatants.

- Limited Intelligence – Totenkorps may never capture, control, or pick up Objectives (including Intelligence Markers) in scenarios that use them. Their presence still prevents enemy units from capturing or controlling Objectives if within 3".

Returning models must be able to be placed in formation with the unit and not within 1" of an enemy unit – note that this means the ability may not be used whilst the Totenkorps unit is engaged in Close Quarters combat. Models which cannot be placed are lost. A Totenkorps unit may not exceed its starting number of models using this ability.
- Surging Bonus: Gain +1 Pen at Close Quarters.
- Exhausted Penalty: May not be given Run Orders, including for the purposes of making an Assault.

SCHRECKWULFEN SQUAD

The Schreckwulfen are terrifying Axis shock units, a product of twisted biological Rift science. In form they resemble the mythical Werewolf possessing immense strength, speed, and heightened senses. This makes them particularly lethal in hand-to-hand combat. Protected by sinewy muscle and regenerative properties, they are extremely hard to kill and their wolf-like howl strikes fear into those they attack. Schreckwulfen are generally deployed as line breakers or as a rapid counter-attacking reserve. While highly effective when let loose, their animalistic nature makes them hard to control, often expending themselves in berserk frenzies on the battlefield.

NACHTJÄGER SQUAD

When first encountered by Allied and Soviet soldiers these entities were described as demons from the darkest depths of hell; terrifying nocturnal creatures with grotesque, membranous wings, raking talons, and razor sharp teeth. They excel in night operations, using their enhanced senses and a stealthy approach before ripping apart their unsuspecting quarry. Unlike other Axis Horror troops, the Nachtjäger display a keen intelligence and communicate with each other. Dog-tags and other personal effects have been found on their corpses, opening up the terrifying prospect that these winged monstrosities either keep trophies from their kills, or retain memories and keepsakes from their past, human, lives.

NACHTALBEN SQUAD

The Nachtalben are one result of human test subjects being exposed to Rift energy, warping them grotesquely whilst leaving them with all their cognitive faculties. Terrifyingly, this means that the test subjects were more than likely voluntary, given their continuing proclivity to military discipline. They are unnaturally fast, with heightened reflexes and unlike other Axis Rift troops carry weapons and fight more like conventional infantry, though they have displayed a limited ability to temporarily shape-shift. As such, Nachtalben specialize in infiltration, ambushes, disrupting enemy lines under the cover of darkness, and moving through tough terrain with unnatural ease.

INFANTRY TEAMS

MACHINE GUN TEAMS

Axis machine guns, like the MG 34 and MG 42, are highly effective weapons. The MG 42 Medium Machine Gun on its sustained fire mount had an impressive rapid-fire capability earning the nickname 'Buzzsaw'. Currently the Axis armed forces see no reason to replace this dependable weapon.

ANTI-TANK TEAMS

The increasing deployment of heavily armoured enemy walkers and tanks on the battlefield prompted the Axis High Command to speed up the production of an improved Panzerschreck to be issued to all units, including to the Schwertruppen infantry divisions.

SNIPER TEAMS

In common with their opponents, Axis snipers have begun to adopt the use of new 'anti-machine' rifles derived from obsolete Anti-Tank Rifles. Whilst ineffective against newer armoured vehicles the high calibre rounds are well-suited for penetrating the powered armour that is becoming ever more prevalent on the battlefield.

LIGHT MORTAR / MORTAR TEAMS

The Axis army still relies on mortars to provide the majority of its short to medium range indirect fire requirements. Even the most advanced troops are still vulnerable to accurately delivered high explosive rounds. Axis Forces deploy 50mm, 80mm long and short variants, and 120mm heavy mortars.

ANTI-TANK GUNS

Before the coming of the Rifts Axis anti-tank guns, the Pak 36, Pak 40, and Pak 43, were pivotal in defeating armoured vehicles. Early models began to struggle against heavy tanks, but later designs, like the Pak 40 (75mm) and Pak 43 (88mm), were highly effective, offering long-range precision and powerful armour-piercing shells. After Dresden, the reconstituted Axis forces began to experiment with and deploy new technology anti-tank weapons such as the Schienenkanone and Schwerefeld Projektor.

WALKERS

PZ.KPFG. 1 AUSF. A SPINNE

The Panzerkampfsgeher I Ausf. A, named the Spinne ('spider'), was the first combat walker to enter service, debuting during the Ardennes breakthrough in early 1945. The Spinne was a relatively cautious early design derived from the layout of the Sd.Kfz 222 armoured car with a Rift-technology-based power plant and multiple spider-like legs. Armed with a light anti-tank gun and 20mm autocannon, it proved effective against both lighter vehicles and infantry. The Spinne soon proved itself capable of unprecedented mobility and endurance for an armoured vehicle in the snowbound, densely forested Ardennes region. In Axis service, the Spinne still sees use primarily for reconnaissance and rapid response.

PZ.KPFG. 1 AUSF. B FLAMMENSPINNE

PZ.KPFG. II VOGELSPINNE

The Panzerkampfsgeher II Vogelspinne started life as an improved 'heavy' variant developed from the Spinne by adding an extra pair of legs to reduce the wear on individual bearings that plagued the Pz.Kpfg I. The added complication of the drivetrain and gyroscopes necessitated lengthening the hull substantially and the project was dubbed the Pz.Kpfg. II VogelSpinne instead. The VogelSpinne retains the light anti-tank gun and 20mm autocannon weaponry of the Spinne but in a fully-enclosed, armoured turret. Provision has also been made to mount a Rift-powered light Schwerefeld weapon, a Maschinen Schwere, or a twin light flak cannon mounting.

PANZER. IV AUSF. X MIT NACHRÜSTSATZ PANZERLÄUFER

The Panzer IV has served as the Wehrmacht's armoured workhorse for over 10 years. With the birth of Rift-technology and the advent of 'walker warfare', and following the success of the Spinne, the dependable Panzer IV chassis was retrofitted to create a multi-legged variant as a stop-gap measure whilst bespoke walker designs such as the Wotan could be implemented and put into mass production.

PZ.KPFG. VII HEUSCHRECKE

The potency of Axis walkers dominated battlefields in a most satisfactory fashion until the Allies could bring their own walkers into service. Once they did so, however, the rough handling being meted out at close quarters by highly mobile bipedal walkers prompted a re-examination of Axis walker design philosophy. The most promising prototype - the Heuschrecke ('Locust'), clearly inspired by captured examples of the United States Mudskipper - was selected for further trials. The Pz.Kpfg. VII features a so-far unique variant of Axis gravitic technology that allows it to leap like its namesake. This added mobility combined with a bipedal frame has made it a powerful supporting vehicle for Falke and Nachtjäger squads.

PZ.KPFG. V AUSF. A THOR

The Pz.Kpfg. V is currently the heaviest Axis walker design in service. The Thor stands on multiple robust, heavily reinforced legs, giving it excellent stability on rough terrain and able to traverse urban rubble with ease. Its main turret is fitted with either a Schwerefeld Projektor or a 15cm howitzer to destroy fortified positions, bunkers, and armoured vehicles. Its secondary armament of a forward firing 20mm autocannon is ideal for dealing with lighter vehicles and infantry. The Thor has very thick armour, capable of withstanding heavy anti-tank rounds and even Tesla fire. The frontal armour is particularly tough, making it an excellent breakthrough vehicle and highly capable in defence, allowing it to spearhead assaults with minimal risk.

PZ.KPFG. V AUSF. B WOTAN

In response to improving Allied and Soviet armour a new version of the Pz.Kpfg. V, the Ausf. B 'Wotan', was designed to operate as a tank hunter in challenging terrain. This variant has its turret modified to take the formidable 150mm KwK 44 super-heavy anti-tank gun. With the steady introduction of more reliable vehicle-mounted Rift derived weaponry, new versions of the Pz.Kpfg. V, the Ausf. D and Ausf. E variants, mount the Schienenkanone rail cannon.

PZ.KPFW. VI KONIGSTIGER AUSF. X

The Tiger II, or King Tiger, is an Axis heavy tank, combining formidable 150mm frontal armour with the potent Schienenkanone Rift weapon. Despite its superior firepower and protection, it is still plagued by mechanical issues and high fuel consumption limiting its mobility and effectiveness on the battlefield. Efforts are currently underway to address these concerns with new Rift technology.

SCHWEREFELD PROJEKTOR EMPLACEMENT

Having used Panther tank turrets in concealed defensive positions successfully during the defence of the Rhine, the practice of enhancing prepared positions with modified tank turrets is now considered as routine doctrine. Numerous Rift-tech Schwerefeld Projektor turrets have been installed in defence of vital Axis installations.

TRANSPORTS & TOWS

Transports remain as relevant as ever, serving vital logistical needs and getting troops where they need to be. The introduction of heavy powered armour, and bulky genetically modified troops, however, has rendered conventional transports somewhat less effective. For now they remain in service. Engineers are hard at work coming up with fresh designs to accommodate the new age of warfare.
